

Another Inconvenient Truth?

Fort Collins Colo.

Recently a high school history teacher in the Poudre School District, (<http://www.psd.k12.co.us/>), was covering the founding of the United States. As part of the lesson she posted the Bill of Rights in her classroom. A sharp-eyed student noticed the absence of one of the first ten amendments to the United States Constitution. The 2nd Amendment, the right to keep and bear arms, was missing. The student told his parents of the omission, they contacted the teacher who declined to restore the document. They phoned the principal - who sided with the teacher. They set up a conference with the principal and at that meeting the principal had changed his mind. The teacher was ordered to display the Bill of Rights in it's entirety. She did so, briefly, and then removed it from the classroom.

Anybody think this should be addressed, maybe by a mob with torches and pitchforks?

This information came from a caller to a local radio station talk show on Saturday February 24, 2007. The caller did not want to name drop so we need to find out in what school this happened and who this teacher was.
